DIVORCE BY "PULL"

New York has bad its full share of sense tional divorce suits, but none of them hav equalled in startling developments the mys terious proceedings by which Mrs. JAMES A FLACE has been divorced from her husband the Sheriff of this county.

The alleged plaintiff denies that she ever eased for a divorce. And yet she is no longe the wife of the Sheriff. There is no publ entry of the instituting of the suit, of th appointment of the referee or the decree o divorce. Every stage of the transaction was enveloped in darkest secrecy and the papers under seal, "By order of the Court," What Court?

The Judge in whose court this scandalous proceeding occurred, and by whose order, it is said, secrecy was enjoined, is Judge BOOKSTAVER. He denies any complicity in the Star Chamber divorce. We hope he is guiltless, but he ought to be investigated.

One officer of the court, Clerk JARVIS, knew all about it, and he should be "fired" He has a bad record, any way. Without his connivance this blot upon the courts of New York was impossible.

The danger to morality from entire publicity in divorce proceedings is infinitesimal compared to the evils that may and do result from the Star Chamber proceedings, whereby people are divorced without knowing it.

BISMARCK, THE SOCIALIST.

The significance of the extraordinary legislation in Germany, rendering a species of old age insurance compulsory for German workmen, is gradually being recognized.

The general tone of the interviews with labor leaders and Socialists here, published in THE EVENING WORLD, is that the measure is intended as a check to Democratic tendencies. BISMARCE, in other words, favors a phase of Socialism which shall nevertheless be under the thumb of Monarchy, He is doubtless prepared to go to still greater lengths in this direction.

But Monarchial Socialism is a long way removed from Popular Government. As THE WORLD has well said, the only real remedy for Despotism is Democracy.

CHICAGO TALK.

It has been truthfully remarked that money talks." This is true of almost every conceivable enterprise, but especially so with respect to the proposed World's Fair. People may talk, and talk, and talk,

And rival the jackass's bray; But they can't start a fair By sawing the air.

For those things ain't started that way. The ridiculous flasco at Chicago yesterday, whereat an indifferent gathering of citizens met to inaugurate measures for securing for that city the location of the World's Fair. and adjourned without an attempt to sound shows plainly that Chicago has been rightly named the "Windy" City. Before New York, the natural place for holding that affair and the choice of almost everybody, can secure a lien that cannot be disputed, its men of wealth must come forward with pledges of cash. The quicker they do it the better. It is time for substantial $2.14.

THE CAMPAIGN POET RECOGNIZED. A forger, undergoing a term of imprisonment in California, was recently pardoned at the solicitation of the Harrisons. The moving cause of their interest in the convict was that during the recent Presidential campaign he wrote a song glorifying Harrison. doors swing out for him. There is a solemn thought suggested in connection with this event. Will not such treatment increase the number of campaign poets and swell the volume of sickening doggerel with which the American people are deluged about election time? If such should be the result then there is no forgiveness for SENJAMIN. The campaign poet should be suppressed, not encouraged,

A PECULIAR PROCEEDING.

Before Gov. BEAVER, of Pennsylvania, would consent to deliver to the South Carolina authorities a negro preacher, held on the charge of murder, he wanted the Governor of that State to give assurances that the prisoner would have a fair trial. This was a peruliarly cheeky performance. By what process of reasoning the Pennsylvania Exscutive considered himself called upon to insult South Carolina's Governor it must be interesting to know.

TOILING WIVES.

Nell Nelson Visits Two Whose Husbands

Are Dying. It takes five hours, $14 and a carriage full of baby clothes to relieve the special cases in Dr. Leppa's and Dr. Hallwood's districts.

From Dr. Foster I received thirty-five garments, 102 little pieces, such as caps, bibs, socks and flannel bandages; twenty dozen sponges, fifty pieces of the best castile scap $50 GOLD WATCH$50 that's made, half a dozen nursing-bottles, one bottle of cod-liver oil, six cans of prepared food and fifty story books.

We go to see a little boxmaker first, whom Dr. Lepps has been treating. She lives at 199 Elizabeth street and is slowly dying of consumption. Poor Maggie is only nineteen, but one of the noblest little women that ever breathed the breath of life. At the age of twelve she started out to fight father and younger brothers and sisters have leaned for support and subsistence. From nature she inherited a pretty face, and from her father the insidious disease that is now sapping her strength. Two months ago, while at work in the box factory, she was taken sick and had to be carried home. She expected to be back the next morning, but hard as she tried she could not leave her bed, and has not since.

The foreman sent word that her place would be reserved for her, but the doctor says she will never go back. And so we made up a special package for this brave girl, and kept the babies waiting just to hear what she ould say and to see how she would accept it, accustomed as she has been all her life to giving and getting nothing in return.

First there was a chicken, the plumpest we could find, for a pie and a broth; then a glass of strawberry jelly for dessert; a bunch of sweet peas, for a bit of fragrance; a new soft sponge and a scented cake of soap, just for fun : Dr. Foster's bottle of cod-liver oil for strength; two books to feed the soul, that some sweet woman had sent all the way from Poughkeepsie, and finally a new night. dress, pretty enough for a wrapper, made of fine cambric and yoked and ruffled with flat Val. as the shop girls say.

Two red spots burned flowers and new books to press away the pain n the right side. The doctor watched and worked over her, and from her mother I learned the sore needs of her little household.

"We have this small store, but there are many days when the sales are only 20 cents. All the people are Italians about here, and they will not trade with us. This stock? My lear, I would sell out for $10 in cash week in the box factory, and her wages pay been thrown back and I don't know how we are going to live,"

The doctor has many words of comfort for the mother, prescribes for the father and cautions the slender little creature in the dark bedroom against excitement, and when we leave she says we are good and THE EVENING WORLD is very good.

Then we see the mother with the dead child and try to tell her our sorrow at not being able to supply the promised shroud. At 220 Mott street we go through the big tenement, again greet the children and fit with slips, socks and barrie coats, not less than thirteen babies. Here, too, we get rid of the nursing bottles, a little library of story books and the bulk of Mrs. Elizabeth K. D.'s nice soap. The prepared food is a vexation, for there are only six packages in all, and at least ten were applicants for each. We compromise with milk and provide for sixteen

The first stop is made at 341 East Ninely seventh street, where, in one of the third floor flats, an extremely sad case is revealed. The family comes from Bohemia, There are two children too young to talk, and neither the unhappy mother nor the doomed husband speaks the American language. The man is wasting away with consumption, and for nine months the little woman has sup ported him, paid the rent and kept herself and family from starving.

I find her in a small room, half filled with tobacco, making cigars, and expecting hourly the birth of another child. Near by two white-faced, sweet little children sit side by side, and in the adjoining room is the victim

A neighbor is found to act as a medium of conversation, from whom I learn the sad condition of the family. The doctor said give the man nourishing food, but there is money only to pay the rent, and although she works day and night, she is only able to make 1,000 cigars a week, for which she is paid $5. There is no one to help her, she says to the interpreter, and bursts into tears, which we are powerless to dry.

For the package of clothes which the tender-hearted doctor prepared for the unborn child she is unspeakably grateful, and we give her $3, which will buy the first generous meal the famile has had in a year.

Of all the sad and needy cases we have seen since the work began this is the most deserving, and one that must touch a responsive chord in the heart of every mother, extreme limit of the power invested in him Just how the weman has managed to live for the past year must always be a mystery to Everything about the place is as neat and sweet as untiring industry, soap and water can make it. The husband, also a cigar maker, is dying with consumption, the mother has seven children under twelve years, and the babe at her breast is sick, restless and sleepless.

For the past six months the family have denended on the charity of friends as poor almost as themselves. Sympathetic mothers have taken turns in nursing the sick babe : the young children have been "borrowed" this minute. My husband is a consumptive | to feed and wash that the mother might get and unable to do any kind of work. I have sufficient sleep and time to enable her to roll a little girl of thirteen who makes $3 a $3 worth of cigars a week. Anxiety for the consumptive busband and languishing baby the rent. Since Maggic's sickness, we have the care of the six other children, the demands of the home and the lack of food were too great for endurance, and Monday she gave up, laid aside the fillers and wrappers on which she had tried so hard to work, and surrendered to despair.

Yesterday we found a man at the tobacco pile

" I have known these people eight years, and I had to come. He is dying I know. Did you see him? One look will tell you that. I shall work here till there is money to pay the rent, to feed him, and put bread and milk in the children's mouths, and then

Dr. Hallwood slaps him on the shoulder, says a couple of nice things that makes his face flush and the wrappers fly through his fingers, quiets the sorrowing child with a powder, comforts the weary despondent mother, prescribes for the runabouts, and leaves the bundle of clothes. We should have bread and meat for her, but this is not to be our last visit.

In 422 East Seventy-sixth street children of seven, five, three, two and one-half a year old are crying for food and health. The husband can get nothing to do and his family has had only rice to eat for three months. We hunt up 50 cents, leave the little garments for the pretty, ailing children and the happiness that diffuses itself about the group makes us ashamed of our pultry offering.

"Those who imagine that Gov. Lowry will not do his best to capture Sullivan and Kilrain and punish them according to the laws of Mississippi may be sadly fooled," says a correspondent of the Arkansas Democrat.

From this incipient starting point arose a difference which threatened to be serious.

Friends of both parties interceded and tried to prevent any fatal encounter, and they flattered themselves that the trouble had all been smoothed over.

One day the steamer Sunflower Bell came up to the landing and Lowry started to go

Lowry was stone dead when he struck the deck of the vessel. Holman raised his revolver to fire again, but at that junction John Arnold came running on the boat. Rushing up behind Holman, he caught his arm, exclaiming:

"Don't shoot any more; can't you see that "Don't shoot any more; can't you see that you have killed him?" "What, is that you?" demanded Holman, as he turned the pistol down against Arnold's

Socialists Say the Insurance Bill Is to Set Back Socialism.

It Was Done to Take the Wind Out of Their Sails.

The Pension from the Old Age Fund Benefits Only Those Over Seventy Years Old.

To learn what the Socialists think of the new German measure of state insurance for the workmen, a reporter called on Mr. W. L. Rosenberg, the editor of Der Socialist, a Socialist weekly journal, whose office is No. curred in Mississippi some years ago in which | 25 East Fourth street. Mr. Rosenberg is a young-looking man in spectacles. He studied in St. Petersburg, and was formerly a teacher of Greek and Latin. When asked what he thought of the new measure, he said:

"The Socialists in Germany are not against it in principle. They oppose it because it is of seventy years. But the average duration of the life of a German workman is between forty and fifty years. So, you see, only a few German workmen will ever live to enjoy he considered due of his rank and station, he made some remarks which speedily aroused the temper of both gentlemen, and they parted in an ill-humor. From this incipient starting point arose a difference which threatened to be serious.

Friends of both parties interceded and tried to prevent any fatal encounter, and they flattered themselves that the trouble had all been smoothed over.

One day the steamer Sunflower Bell came up to the landing and Lowry started to go aboard to transact some business. Before leaving the office, however, he was warned by his confidential clerk, John Arnold, that Holman was on board the boat prepared to settle the trouble between them.

"That makes no difference," replied Lowry, "I am going on anyhow," and away he went.

'Bismarck has taken up Socialistic ideas, especially those of Lasalle, who was his friend. When he gave general suffrage to Germany be was following Lasalle's ideas. He is the first statesman who has widened the horizon of the duties and functions of the State. He has decided that the State should interfere for the welfare of its people, and to improve the condition of the millions of the poor.

and to improve the condition of the millions of the poor.

"Bismarck is a champion of monarchy. What he hates is not Socialism. Bome day monarchical Socialism may be arrayed against Democratic Socialism. All the attempts Bismarck has made to organize a Christian Socialist party in Germany have been in vain. Christian Socialism meant not anything Christian, but monarchical Socialism. Socialism,
The new measure will be of no benefit to the German workmen. Its value is entirely in its acknowledgment of the justice of the principle of Socialism. The nobility and the other conservatives supported the measure. It was the bourgeoisie, the manutacturers and wine-growers who opposed it.

"It is a great step towards Socialism. Despite the conciliatory intention of the law the Socialist party in Germany will hence-forth be larger than ever. The strike in Westphalia did a great deal for the Socialist cause. Socialism is now a general public movement in Germany."

Mr. Albert Jonas, the amiable Socialist who edits the Volks Zeitung, said:

"The measure is of no importance, except that it establishes a principle. It is intended to neutralize the Socialistic plans, to take the wind out of the sails of the Socialists, The money amount to be paid is small.

The money amount to be paid is small.

"The workman has to be seventy years old before he can get anything from the old-age fund and he must have contributed a part of it. Seldom the German workman lives so long. The life of the officers in the German army is longer than that of the German workmen. workmen.

Nevertheless the measure is very impor-

Ascertaness the measure is very impor-tant in acknowledging the principle that the State has to take care of its people in old age and in cases of illness and accident. "The measure passed by a zvery small ma-jority, because the Government wanted to conciliate the growing discontent in Ger-many. Most of the Conservatives voted for it many.
